However, it was also a mess, and so we ended up using an AC Servo Motor, which is a small AC motor powered by a 5V DC power supply. It costs about $20, but it actually works great. So we removed the friction wheel and fastened it to the shaft. The servo motor is also a battery-less motor, so that the battery can go in the power supply. The AC motor will spin the friction wheel with no motor current. It worked great, and we were able to reduce our energy consumption by about half, but as it turned out, our service
