Nico Rosberg is enjoying the idea of Sebastian Vettel and Fernando Alonso battling for supremacy over the next five years. The German driver holds a 10-point advantage over Lewis Hamilton heading into the final race of the season in Abu Dhabi.

Hamilton will start from the back row of the grid after the FIA's decision to ban his Mercedes front wing following a crash in practice last weekend, but Rosberg will line up alongside teammate Valtteri Bottas on the front row. Bottas, who has previously stated he is more motivated by the chance of taking victory than his title battle with Hamilton, is looking forward to locking horns with the British driver over the last few laps. "I think it's good for the championship, it's good for the racing," he said. "Obviously it's a fantastic thing for him to be starting from the back and to battle against Vettel and Fernando. "It's a good scenario. It's good that we can go to the end of the season and everyone is fighting for the championship. "You get to show your skills and your talent, your speed, your overtaking and all those things. It's always good for the
