[Infectious endocarditis prophylaxis in the critically ill]. Infectious endocarditis is a serious disease which can cause death or disability if left untreated. The risks of endocarditis in critically ill patients are multifactorial. The treatment consists of three components: antimicrobial prophylaxis, cardiac surgery and transesophageal echocardiography. The latter can both contribute to the diagnosis of endocarditis, but also to the development of bacterial resistance. In a patient with a weakened immune system, transesophageal echocardiography may also present the most practical solution to the diagnosis of endocarditis. This manuscript provides an overview of the risk factors, clinical presentation, diagnosis, and treatment options for infective endocarditis in the critically ill patient. Phytochemicals and Cancer Prevention and Therapy. This review is an examination of research which examined the impact of phytochemicals on the prevention and treatment of cancer. Epidemiological evidence implicates diet as a major factor in the development of cancer and other chronic diseases. Phytochemicals
