If you have any interest in keeping track of your historical data, there are several applications available for this purpose. Easy access through its simple interface Historical Log Book works as a complete standalone application, with no need to synchronize the data to or from a server. It works in conjunction with any data source which allows you to add new data by simply filling in fields. Where it counts, large text When it comes to data input, the application doesn't cater for just any data format. You have full access to a list of columns as well as the ability to enter any of these, regardless of their type. Text, dates, numbers, user names, and even telephone numbers can be recorded. Graphical interface and fast data input As soon as you select a field from the left side, the relevant field will be activated for editing. Multiple fields can be selected in a similar way by simply toggling the highlighted field. Alternatively, there's a search function which lets you automatically assign a name to your new items. It also allows you to search for items of particular data, such as item number and model. The application is intuitive enough to use, even without a previous background in history, and will likely provide you with an enjoyable reminder of the past. A few last words The company behind the application offers a 30-day money back guarantee and can be accessed through its website. Inevitably, having gone through a number of transitions myself (and, thankfully, now married to my second husband and...the end), I got to thinking about my own career path. Now, I'll confess, I've never worked at a "real" job. As far as I'm concerned, I've always done freelance work, from my high school years onward. I've written a book, currently working on my next one. I've blogged since about 2003, when I graduated from college. I've written about five-or-so magazine articles, including a three-part series on working-at-home moms. I write articles, give speeches, and conduct workshops and presentations, and I like to dabble in all of them. When I first came to New Jersey, I did public relations at a local university, and that was interesting, and then I did that for a while and I left for a job as a speech and workshop teacher in a local career counseling agency. And then I left that because I wanted to begin working on writing my next book, and while I was at it, I wrote a book. And so I did the whole job-in-a-job-at-a-job thing. In fact, I was in a job for the past four years, but now I'm done with that and I'm just...wow. So it was kind of fun, frankly, to
