I have just owned it for 3 years, with the current owner.I went the route of my Dad and Mother. I opted for a four-barrelled German piece. I say four-barrelled because not all four are fired at the same time. My father had three, one loaded with each of his three bullets. I opted for a four-barrelled piece and each barrel has a different bullet. The three-barrelled piece I had, had only three bullets, one for each barrel. I have three Russian, and one for each pistol. Two of the three Russian guns were acquired while the third, from Germany, was given to me by my friend, "Attila", in gratitude for me in providing the opportunity to buy a piece at such a low price. As for my "savior", she didn't have one. For this article, I opted for a five-barrelled piece which has a different configuration. Three of the five barrels are loaded and are fired at the same time. The five-barrelled piece was another present from "Attila". The fact
