Creating an effective and well-organized life or business is simple when your belongings are clean and organized. A cluttered work or business area is a space that is not conducive to a productive business or workday. One thing that makes a huge difference in your day-to-day comfort and productivity is having your desk or work table organized. A clean and organized desk will improve your mood, your work or business efficiency and your everyday stress level. This is because having everything in a straight forward and organized manner, makes it easy to access your files, papers, and supplies. For this reason, a simple way to improve your work day is to keep your desk and workspace well-organized. Here are 5 tips to keep your work space organized. 1. Sort your supplies No matter what you are working on at any given time, it is important to know where everything is. A cluttered work space may make it extremely difficult for you to locate things you need quickly. In addition, a cluttered work space can be distracting if you are trying to focus on a specific task. In a clean and organized space, anything is easier to find. Think about a time you need something to do a specific task. Where can you find it without having to search for it? 2. Fold your paper If you are like most people, you will have a file drawer somewhere in your workspace. You most likely have a closet or drawers with an abundance of supplies. Be sure to use your file folders to store your paper so that your work space is organized and neat. Not having your paper piled up all over the place makes life much easier. 3. Keep your desk clean The first thing that draws you into a messy desk is work that is out of place. You have probably thrown away a piece of paper or cleaned a surface that simply needs to be wiped down. If you notice that papers, pencils, pens, and other supplies are out of place, it can make you feel anxious to work. 4. Keep your work space clean This is simply a matter of orderliness. If you have a desk with junk on it, you will not be comfortable and it will make the work day more stressful. If you notice items that are not in the same place every day, clean them up. If you own a paper shredder or you are in the habit of throwing paper away, make sure to clean up the mess. 5. Keep

The present invention relates to the regeneration of fluid catalytic cracking catalysts. The fluid catalytic cracking of hydrocarbons is accomplished by contacting hydrocarbons in a reaction zone with a catalyst composed of finely divided particulate material. The catalyst is transported like a fluid in the reaction zone and is cracked to desorb hydrocarbons contained in the hydrocarbons in contact with the catalyst. User demands for products and product quality and the need for efficient use of the catalyst impose high selectivity requirements upon the cracking catalysts. A significant portion of the hydrocarbons fed to a catalytic cracking unit is converted into carbon dioxide, water, and lower molecular weight hydrocarbons. Carbon dioxide and water are produced in the reaction zone in greater amounts than would occur if the hydrocarbons were not cracked; lower molecular weight hydrocarbons are formed in decreasing amounts as conversion increases. The products of cracking, carbon dioxide, water and the lower molecular weight hydrocarbons are referred to hereinafter as "spent reactants". Catalytic cracking is an endothermic conversion reaction. The heat generated in the reaction zone during the cracking is supplied in major part by the spent reactants. If the average temperature of the spent reactants leaving the reaction zone is not maintained at a sufficiently high level, "cold spots" may develop in the fluidized catalyst, possibly resulting in coking of the catalyst, decreased selectivity and/or decreased conversion. One way of maintaining the reaction temperature at a desired level is to add heat to the reaction zone. Heat may be added directly to the reaction zone by burning additional fuel to supply the heat. Such "external" combustion systems require fuel and an ignition source or "burners" external to the reaction zone. These "external" systems are effective in maintaining a desired reaction zone temperature when the reaction zone is a separate vessel remote from the fluid catalytic cracking catalyst regenerator. The use of burners in the regeneration zone of a fluid catalytic cracking apparatus to add heat to the regenerator poses certain problems. In particular, it is desirable to maintain a continuous flow of catalyst through the fluid catalytic cracking apparatus for efficiency reasons. The use of a separate vessel to contain the regeneration zone and the separate vessel containing the reaction zone presents a problem of switching from the regeneration zone to the reaction zone and vice versa. One means of solving this problem is to add combustion-generated heat directly to the reaction zone. However, this requires the combustion of additional fuel in the reaction zone. Moreover
