For any assistance please contact Balsamiq onCited for what it is on our refusal to be asked for such a thing After watching the second half of the NHL trade deadline unfold, two things seem certain for Edmonton Oilers fans. One, that the Edmonton Oilers will not be trading Taylor Hall, and two, that the Edmonton Oilers will not be asking the New York Rangers to trade for him. When Hall was returned to the Oil on Tuesday from the injured reserve list, it marked the culmination of a lot of questions and misconceptions. The latest biggie: does the Oilers regret not picking up a term? While trading Hall is the correct decision, for most, especially him and the Oilers, this is not a difficult decision to make. Picking up a term just makes for a lot of questions. Read past the jump for a deeper dive into Taylor Hall returning to the Oilers, and why Edmonton fans are comfortable in their decision on Hall. Hall is a 2nd or 3rd line centre. There is a clear place for him and a direction he will play. A term does not create question. Drafting or developing the player makes for a risky decision. The Case For: Taylor Hall coming back to the Oilers is a done deal. The Oilers find themselves in a conundrum. So much happened between the NHL trade deadline and Oilers head coach Dallas Eakins' announcement that Hall 3da54e8ca3
