The forecast is announced on TV at least three times a day, but if that's not enough for you, or TV isn't your favorite environment for information, you might want to check Weather - Weather forecast live. A tiny yet colorful application that provides the forecast for your city, or any other location in the world. Your location is automatically detected The first launch will bring up the location associated with your IP address. That means that each time you plan to go outside and enjoy your time, you can check out the forecast. Regarding the layout, this application is designed to offer you as many details as possible. Besides the ability to display weather conditions and temperature daily, hourly and weekly, you'll also be able to check out information about the cloudiness, humidity, UV intensity, wind speed, and precipitation levels. Overall, you can access a lot of information about how's going to be outside with very low effort. Weather conditions abroad Your location being the only one analyzed upon starting the application does not mean that you cannot see the forecast for other regions. Use the search function to type the name of a city in. Wait for the suggestions list to open up, and choose the location from there. In case the location you're searching for is not generating any suggestions it can mean two things. One, the word has a type in it or the application doesn't support it. However, we've tested this function with cities and towns all over the world, and as long as they were correctly written, the forecast should be displayed.

Conclusion Weather - Weather forecast live looks like a functional forecast utility for people who wish to check the weather from their desktop or laptop, but there is a small downside to it. It looks like a clone of any other forecast program out there, bringing nothing original to the table. Still, if you don't really care about how it looks or who developed it, this tool can cut it. Q: What is it, and how do I disable it? I am having a weird issue. I set a time with the mac, then left it for a while. I came back and the time was back to the time i set. I read that it is called auto lock, and I need to set it to "never" or something like that. Where is it located, and how do I disable it? A: Open System Preferences -> General -> Start up and shutdown, and turn off "Put the computer to sleep when inactive for

What's New in the Weather - Weather Forecast Live?

Your location is automatically detected. The first launch will bring up the location associated with your IP address. That means that each time you plan to go outside and enjoy your time, you can check out the forecast. When it comes to design, the layout is suitable for a desktop, or a laptop screen. It's black on white, which is a bit monotonous, but still, it works. You'll be able to select which of the major cities you want to check out, and the forecast will be displayed for them. In terms of information, the application comes with a lot of data about the weather. You can see the daily temperature, weekly wind speed, cloudiness, UV intensity, humidity, and precipitation levels. Overall, you can access a lot of information about how's going to be outside with very low effort. We've tested this feature with cities and towns all over the world, and as long as they were correctly written, the forecast should be displayed. Description: Your location is automatically detected. The first launch will bring up the location associated with your IP address. That means that each time you plan to go outside and enjoy your time, you can check out the forecast. Upon opening the application, the forecast is delivered at an interval of one hour. You'll be able to see the weather for the next hour at any time. The forecast is formatted in such a way that you'll be able to see that "Clear",

"Cloudy" or "Partly Cloudy", but the weather will actually be pretty uniform at that moment. It's the forecast you've always dreamed about. It's the weather you've always wanted to check before leaving home or going outside. Description: Your location is automatically detected. The first launch will bring up the location associated with your IP address. That means that each time you plan to go outside and enjoy your time, you can check out the forecast. There are several ways to check out the forecast: a radar window, a map window, and a list of cities. In case you're the type of people who doesn't enjoy showing others how cool they look, the radar is the easiest way to find out about the weather. The map can be useful if you want to know if the weather in your location is normal or not, and of course, the list of cities will deliver the forecast of those locations. Overall, the application seems to be fine. If you're planning to use this app, you'll be able to see how the weather will be outside for the next hour
