MEP MEI MEP MEI (Chinese: 美捷) are 2.5 × 2.5 × 0.5 mm² stainless steel "keycaps" for touchpads and keyboards with an elastomer shell similar to rubber domes. The open-source MIT Media Lab created the first prototype for the typeface character in 2012, they were launched for crowdfunding in 2013. Their objective is to make hardware, software and fonts more freely available, thereby breaking the current monopolies that big companies have on the IT market. Soybeans are a rich source of these compounds, and intake is associated with a lower cancer risk. The effect of soy and isoflavone on breast, endometrial, and ovarian cancer risk has been studied extensively. In a meta-analysis of 12 prospective studies, associations with cancer were 0.76, 0.51, and 0.65 for isoflavone intake and 1.13, 1.15, and 0.72 for soy intake, for breast, endometrial, and ovarian cancers, respectively. These results support the view that intake of soy and isoflavones is associated with lower cancer risks. However, many questions remain about the interactions of isoflavones with other components of the diet (fiber and phytoestrogen-rich foods) and their relation with cancer risk. The Impact of Health Care Reform on the Emergency Department, Prescription Drugs and Workforce The Health Care Reform Act of 2009 and President Obama's Economic Recovery plan and Employment Act of 2009 will affect how local health care agencies are reimbursed for hospital emergency department services, primary care, prescription drugs and other health care costs. These changes have the potential to negatively impact patient care and the health care workforce, unless services are redesigned to assure access and quality of care. It is critical for hospitals to understand and begin to implement the changes in the law so that emergency department services continue to be accessible to all consumers. These changes impact how hospitals are reimbursed for emergency department care, and set new payment
