The aim of this study was to elucidate the effects of chymotrypsin (Chy) on the activities of gastrointestinal proteolytic enzymes in man. In the upper part of the gastrointestinal tract (mouth, pharynx, esophagus, stomach, duodenum, and jejunum) Chy (0.7-70.8 kU/l) induced both proteolytic and amylolytic activities, but with different levels of activity. The highest levels of proteolytic activity (0.4-2.4 kU/l) were observed after treatment with Chy, equal to 4-13-fold the basal levels of proteolytic activities. In the upper gastrointestinal tract Chy induced peptidolytic activity as well, in particular in the oesophagus (75.8 kU/l), and especially after ingestion of 70.8 kU/l Chy. In the lower intestinal tract the activity of Chy was low. Chy, 4.6-6.7 kU/l, induced only weak proteolytic activity (0.4-0.6 kU/l), although high amylolytic activities (0.8-3.8 kU/l) were observed. It was suggested that the Chy-induced activity profiles could be correlated with the possibility of occurrence of adverse clinical effects in man.Q: One way filtering a data frame by a factor levels I have some data from 2016 to 2017 seasons.
