It has many of the same functions, tools, and features as Photoshop, but is primarily targeted at novice and beginning users. I recommend using it as a good starting point to Photoshop if you are someone who spends most of your time creating graphics for web pages or graphics that you want to fine-tune with more control. * Photoshop CS3 is the newest version of the program and provides the user with many new features. Its interface is similar to that of Elements, but it is a step up from that package because it uses layers, which are explained in the next section. Figure 1-3. The Photoshop interface provides a main window for viewing, selecting, and drawing. Other windows contain tools for performing work on images, such as the Photo, Liquify, and Actions panels. From there, you can load up to 20 images at once by saving them in the form of a workspace and then navigating to the images you want to work on.

Q: Google Maps API v2 Android application update takes old locations from map and ignores new ones? My android application is working properly when I look at the older maps/locations, but when I look at the new ones (added over the weekend) all of my old map locations are ignored and I have to scroll back a long way to find them! I have tried the "Clear User Data" option and also tried to force a new draw, but neither seems to have worked. Am I doing something wrong? thanks in advance. A: This behavior is by design. The documentation states it like this: If there is an error, or if a new revision of the map data is available, then `MapView.onPause()` will be called. Typically this will be called when the application process is terminated, and also when the device is rotated. In either of those cases, `MapView.onResume()` will be called, to refresh the map. So your old data is probably cleared when the process is shut down. EphA4 in the regulation of axon growth of forebrain commissural axons: mediation via Raf1. Ephrin-As signaling via receptor tyrosine kinase EphA4 directs hindbrain axon growth and patterning of the nerve net. However, hindbrain but not forebrain neurons require Ephrin-As for their axon growth, whereas a function of EphA4 in forebrain neurons is unknown. Here, we show in mice that ependymal tanycytes (not neurons) in the forebrain require EphA4 for the growth of their projections to the spinal cord, as seen by the scarcity of this projection pattern in EphA4 gene-knockout mice. We further show that EphA4 mediates its growth-promoting effect on tanycyte projections through the activation of the small GTPase c-Raf1. Activation of c-Raf1 in tanycytes requires EphA4, Ephrin-As and an EphA4/Ephrin-As heterodimerization. c-Raf1 translocates to growth cones and activates paxillin-p130Cas, which increases actin polymerization. Our results uncover a novel role for the EphA4/Ephrin-As signaling axis in the regulation of
